A Two-Day Conference for Science Practitioners Working with Children from birth to 8 years of age

We are delighted to host this two-day event at BG for £250 including lunches and dinner on the Thursday plus accommodation (if required)

Science in the early years (0 – 8 years of age) is very misunderstood. Young children's abilities are often underestimated; the way they develop their scientific ideas, skills and attitudes and the factors that affect that development is not always understood; more thought is needed on how teachers can support young children's developing ideas and skills; the potential of cross-curricular and seemingly unrelated experiences is not always fully used.

This 2-day conference will draw upon the work of the Emergent Science Network, set up in 2006 after the successful Emergent Science Conference at Bishop Grosseteste University College Lincoln. It will explore what emergent scientific ideas and skills look like, and will show how we, as practitioners, can support that development in relevant and creative ways

The conference is particularly relevant to Early Years teachers, Teaching Assistants, Classroom Support Assistants, Academics, Researchers, Curriculum Leaders, School Leaders, Advisers and Trainers.

The programme will include:

- keynote lectures and seminars
 - practical workshops
 - exhibition of resources to support science in the early years
